Arts

Wilkintie

Letterpress! Shhhhhh. Don't say it so loud. The graphic designer you live with will start drooling on the good rug. Melbourne's favourite illustrator and street artist Niels Oeltjen (aka 'Nails') has launched a project mixing the cult of 20th century craft printing with the radness of illustration and the convenience of a magazine subscription. In short, Wilkintie is a letterpress illustration subscription. Printed in Melbourne's Nicholas Building at Idlewild Press, each issue features a different local or international artist. The gift that keeps on giving. Maybe put a plastic sheet down though.

The Nicholas Building, 37 Swanston Street, Melbourne.

Retail

Lost + Found Market

Sometimes we like to pretend that Lost and Found is named after this legendary emporium of vintage; it confers a certain old-Hollywood glamour upon our otherwise caffeine-addled street rep. This is the place most locals will tell you to visit for secondhand browsing, so listen up: it has moved! Now just north of Victoria Parade, Lost + Found is brighter and whiter, but still close to the fashion wilds of Gertrude Street. Teapots, Goonies shirts, lawn chairs, Crosby Stills and Nash on vinyl; everything your hipster cousin wants for Christmas in one, convenient warehouse.

12 Smith Street, Collingwood, tel: 03 9419 4477.

Win

The Malthouse Theatre gives us everything but malt liquor and blunts in Season One 2009, collaborating with everyone from Chunky Move to Britain's Young Vic. One of the must-sees is Splintergroup's Lawn – an acclaimed horror fantasy steeped in irony and winter freakishness. Which, by that stage, will make for the perfect summer activity. We have a double, FULL-SEASON subscription to curtain-raiser performances, valued at $552, to give away! To enter, tell us the next best name for the Malthouse Theatre. Creativity and historical considerations equally weighted. Email us at lostandfoundinmelb@gmail.com – including your answer in the subject line – by 5pm, Monday Dec 15.
